

Flora Schreiber, 70,
The Writer of 'Sybil'
And of 'Shoemaker'

The New York Times
November 4, 1988

By ANDREW L. YARROW

Flora Rheta Schreiber, the author of "Sybil," a best-selling book about a woman with multiple personalities, and "Shoemaker," a portrait of a Philadelphia murderer, died of a heart attack yesterday at Beth Israel Hospital in Manhattan. She was 70 years old.

Miss Schreiber, a professor of English and speech at John Jay College of Criminal Justice, first gained renown with "Sybil," her 1973 case study chronicling the life and psychoanalysis of a woman with 16 clinically distinct personalities. The book became a best-seller and was turned into a two-part NBC television movie in 1976.

Because of her studies of the psychological origins of criminality, Miss Schreiber became interested in writing about Joseph Kallinger, a shoemaker who killed three people in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. She interviewed him in jail in 1976, saying that a book about the murderer would show that "it's even more important to prevent the development of psychosis that leads to crime than to get tough with criminals after the event."

Like "Sybil," the new book by Miss Schreiber provoked considerable controversy. After "Shoemaker" was published in 1983, she was sued by the family of one of Kallinger's victims under a so-called Son of Sam law in New Jersey that required that money owed to a criminal or his representatives as a result of his crimes go to the victims. A Superior Court ruled that not only the 12.5 percent promised to Mr. Kallinger but also money earned by Miss Schreiber and her publisher, Simon & Schuster, be paid to the victim's family.

Publishers called the ruling a violation of First Amendment rights of free speech, and an appellate panel reversed the decision.

Before teaching at John Jay College, Miss Schreiber taught for many years at the New School for Social Research and at Adelphi College. She specialized in children's speech and wrote a 1956 manual for parents called "Your Child's Speech."

Miss Schreiber had no immediate survivors.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE AND APOLOGIA

FRS' papers, like Gaul and other monuments, fall naturally into three parts. The parts in this case are defined by the site in which they were housed: Schreiber's Gramercy Park apartment; her John Jay College office; a warehouse in Long Island City.

Without question, the apartment was the primary space in which Schreiber brought together her personal life and her life as a writer. Presumably because the clutter became unbearable, FRS rented warehouse space in Long Island City ca. 1977 and moved out older files, papers, household equipment and whatever else she considered temporarily expendable. The files removed from the apartment after FRS' death, therefore, consisted of materials that either preoccupied her in the last decade of her life or were of such special value that she could not bear to send them into exile. The office files, in addition to being current for Schreiber's academic life, also appeared to be yet another site used to absorb some of the non-current overflow from other areas of activity.

While the materials in all three locations carry the indelible stamp of the creating persona, each also presents unique opportunities for exploring and understanding the life and work they document. Each also presented unique processing problems. The fundamental commitment of the archival trade is to preserve the order and spirit of a collection's originator. In the case of the FRS papers, there has been no alternative to holding faith with the underlying "spirit"; what "order" there was in FRS' life was more in her mind than in the arrangement of the artefacts with which she surrounded herself. Hopefully researchers will not experience untoward difficulty in discovering the large, engaging and generous spirit lurking behind the results of the archivist's tinkering with arrangement.

SERIES ONE: THE APARTMENT FILES

The Schreiber apartment at 32 Gramercy Park South, consisted of a small kitchen, one bedroom and a living room. Despite the rather cramped quarters, it was FRS' primary work place. Every available cranny contained a file cabinet; one living room wall was covered with book shelves. When actively writing, it was Schreiber's custom to set up a very large table across the living room.

In so far as possible, with the caveats referred to earlier, the spirit of Schreibers' arrangement has been maintained. The material aspect of that spirit takes the form of "Categories" that she seemed intent on using to impose a late-in-life order on her files. Originally 64 in number, over time she penned in additional headings for a grand total of 98 divisions [see File #221]. Schreiber, or unknown assistants, set up neatly labeled folders for the first 64 categories but some of these remained empty at the time of her death; some contained material that did not relate to the file name; some contained only one or two items while others bulged with ten or more copies of each document. Despite all of this, Schreiber appeared committed to the scheme: many of the items in cabinets, drawers, plastic bags etc. carried a numbered assignment in her hand.

SYBIL and THE SHOEMAKER files occupy the place of prominence FRS accorded them in her grand scheme. Rather than accepting the prevailing scattering of litigation and Kallinger materials however, these have been brought together with the related SHOEMAKER files. FRS' other publications and related materials follow the two major works - first those that succeeded SYBIL, then those hundreds of diverse articles that formed the pre-SYBIL "oeuvre". In addition to the published works, there are a number of book and article proposals still in process at the time of Schreiber's death (e.g. a Rudolf Hess biography, File #100) or apparently abandoned (e.g. SHEILA GRANT, File #101).

"Professional" and "Personal" materials complete the arrangement. Included here are several hundred family photographs some of which date back to the early 1900's. Among those that can be identified are many childhood photos of FRS and another group that shows her parents at work in the in the New York Public Library's Catalog Division ca. 1912. There is also a file of almost daily correspondence from Schreiber's parents during several periods in the 1930's when she was away from home for extended periods.

Of particular interest in the Series are the "Personal Correspondence" files for both Joseph Kallinger [Files #60-94] and FRS

[Files #224-272]. There is considerable overlap. Some people wrote Schreiber to say that THE SHOEMAKER had moved or touched them. Others attempted to write directly to Kallinger. Sooner or later many of those who stayed the course ended up writing and possibly also visiting with both Kallinger and Schreiber. There was considerable variation among these long-term correspondents. Some sought to bring comfort or religious faith to Kallinger; some sought support and understanding from Schreiber for their own unhappy childhoods or troubled present day lives; others identified with Kallinger because they too were imprisoned or otherwise institutionalized. Some of the correspondents were barely literate, others were students or professionals. In several instances entire families became involved. It was not at all unusual for family snapshots and gifts to be exchanged. (The same process was short-circuited in the case of SYBIL since her anonymity has always been protected).

Kallinger himself (or FRS or her assistant John Shapiro writing in Kallinger's name) answered every letter he received. So too did Schreiber. The latter's responses are unusually full and address whatever pleas for help came her way. The portrait of FRS that emerges is of a complex person and a committed professional; the portrait of Kallinger is considerably less clear since so many other hands were, apparently, willing to edit, amend, and respond in his name.

SERIES TWO: THE OFFICE FILES

In the year preceding Schreiber's death, John Jay College moved its administrative offices and several of its academic departments from somewhat shabby and makeshift rented quarters on West 56th Street to a strikingly beautiful permanent home on Tenth Avenue.

Schreiber's department, Speech and Theater, was one of the affected units. Although she taught classes in the new facility, Schreiber never truly moved in. She had supervised the emptying and packing of the contents of her 56th street office but the fifty relocated cartons were never opened and the treasured photos, book jackets, awards and documents were never re-hung on the pristine walls.

Whatever file order might have prevailed before the packing was obviously obscured in the course of that activity. Nevertheless, despite the apparent chaos, there was enough similarity to the materials that had been housed in the apartment to permit the process of arrangement to proceed with some measure of confidence that, once again, the Schreiber spirit would be preserved.

Again, as in Series One, FRS' publications head the arrangement with SYBIL and THE SHOEMAKER at the top of the list. The "Publications" are followed, as before, by "Professional" and "Personal" files.

Series Two's SYBIL files considerably broaden the earlier presentation. They cover much of the pre-publication activity including a fascinating exercise in naming the not-yet-complete book [File #295] and also a good deal of reader mail. FRS' pattern of meticulously responding to every inquiry is again in evidence although protecting Sybil's identity cut some of this short. Schreiber was marvelously earnest and generous in her responses to Junior and Senior High School students even when an entire class checked in at the same time; she was cautious but caring in the face of frequent requests for diagnostic and psychiatric advice.

Of some special note are the files that illuminate the deep but not always smooth relationship with Sybil's psychiatrist, Dr. Cornelia Wilbur [#315], and an apparently aborted attempt to secure a Nobel prize nomination [#317].

THE SHOEMAKER files dominate this part of the collection just as they did in the earlier Series. In the present instance however it is primarily the work-in-progress that is documented rather than the post-publication relationships, trauma and litigation. Almost one hundred transcribed interviews and a score of correspondence files provide useful insight into Schreiber's approach to her material. So too does the range of documents she assembled in her efforts to get on with the work: Kallinger family adoption and real estate records; newspaper clippings and verbatim trial transcripts related to JK's numerous criminal acts; a seemingly endless array of JK's medical and psychiatric reports over three decades.

The richness of THE SHOEMAKER material in this Series is so pervasive that highlighting one or another file or group of files seems a disservice. There is more than enough of value here to justify diligent scrutiny by researchers interested in topics as diverse as the creative process with its concomitant tangled relationships of author, subject, agent and publisher; the operation of the criminal justice system; the impact and quality of media coverage of sensational crimes; or, of course, the life and times of that fascinating woman, Flora Rheta Schreiber.

There is ample testimony throughout both the Apartment and Office files that one significant part of Schreiber's life and times was her personal and professional relationship with the Stuart Long family. Personal correspondence files in both series are one part of the documentation; the many syndicated articles and the intense professional correspondence that reveal the process as well as the result of the five year Stuart Long/FRS collaboration are another [Files 248, 249, 624-629, 681-684].

In general however, the excitement and focus of FRS' life is not to be gleaned from the "Personal" and "Professional" files but from those devoted to her engagement in the world of research and writing. The one possible exception to that proposition in this Series is to be found in the files devoted to her John Jay College career [Files #646-657]. Schreiber joined the faculty of the College when the institution was founded and she was an active and respected member of the College Community at time of her death.

SERIES THREE: THE WAREHOUSE FILES

The Warehouse Files continue the backward march in time that began with the Apartment and Office Files. As might be expected therefore, SHOEMAKER material occurs only in stray professional correspondence while the fits and starts of SYBIL's beginnings crop up again and again. This is so not only in the "Publication Files" [#688-703] but also in the extensive correspondence with FRS' literary agents during that book's long gestation period [#930-931] and in files dealing with her publisher's lawsuit as Schreiber prepared to author her next book [#940-941]. It is, of course, the only subject of those files to which access is restricted in order to protect Sybil's anonymity [#1078-1104]. Similarly, "Professional" and "Personal" files also expand and fill in the rather detailed Schreiber portrait already in hand.

The series of files documenting FRS' relationships with her numerous literary agents may well tell as much about the writing-life in general as of FRS' writing-life in particular. In Schreiber's case, the germ of a future opus often as not first appeared in a series of letters to and from an agent. If the germ took hold at all, its next appearance was likely to have been in what FRS called a "Resource File" [#725-923]. Contents of these latter files ranged from several skimpy letters of inquiry to a host of article drafts and revisions in addition to a lengthy correspondence record. The vast majority of the subjects that advanced beyond a simple inquiry stage eventually found their way into the books and articles that form such a significant portion of this collection.

A quick scan of either the "Resource File" headings or the titles of the several hundred articles Schreiber wrote seems more than adequate evidence that she found no subject beyond her ken. Neither did she appear to spurn any media form or format. On virtually any subject, FRS delivered radio or live lectures [Box 12 in Series One; Box 25 in Series Two]; saw her articles printed in the likes of TRUE STORY [#716], on NUCCA margarine packages [#714], or in the scholarly journals of her discipline [#714]. And, of course, she also saw her books taken on by major trade publishers.

The window that Series Three opens up on Schreiber's personal life is replete with the family closeness and warmth that the earlier Series would have led one to expect. There is a great deal of youthful and adult family correspondence [#1039-49] that almost lays a foundation for the difficulty Schreiber experienced in "letting go" after her parents' deaths [1031-34;1036-38]. Even so, the contents of the "Daddy File" may well catch a researcher unawares [#1034].

This series also fills in gaps and questions raised by Series Two's Eugene O'Neill Jr. files [669a-b]. Among the Warehouse materials are letters, photos and diaries that speak to an affectionate and intense attachment that was sadly cut short by O'Neill's suicide [#1050-57].

Perhaps the finest research bounty of this Series resides in the files that will remain restricted at least throughout the life of "Sybil Dorsett". These "Confidential Files" contain the diaries, interviews and transcripts of psychoanalytic sessions that were the raw materials for SYBIL, Schreiber's most famous work. When those files finally become available to the research community, not only will it be possible to see Sybil whole, but Flora Rheta Schreiber as well.

IV. CONFIDENTIAL FILES

[The convention has been employed in these files of identifying Sybil by her fictive name, "Sybil Dorsett" or by her fictive initials, "SD", even though her real name is what actually appears. The term "compromised" implies only that Sybil's true identity is either explicitly or implicitly cited. Written permission to use these files must be obtained from the Flora Schreiber Estate.]
